

The Phil Chat Times

All the legs that are fit to print. 11,983 messages, 363 pictures, two rules, one razor, no trimmer.

— THE WEEK'S NEWS · SUNDAY AFTERNOON TO TUESDAY AFTERNOON

THE MOGGENING

A man was called obese on Sunday afternoon. By Monday night he had measured a shin with a Porsche key, shaved one of his own legs, been served two rules, and lost the right to speak. The leg was rock solid throughout.

MONDAY AFTERNOON, SIDE BY SIDE. Left, the leg as God and cycling made it. Right, the same man's other leg after about an hour with a razor and no trimmer. zack's own caption: "shaving turns you Aryan." He had assumed, until that moment, that he was sunburned.

It began in the middle of a Sunday afternoon, in the middle of a different argument. zack had spent an hour explaining, in numbered paragraphs, that since the state holds the monopoly on force it is now more advantageous to be a woman. Janne suggested he try it. Quigley said he felt like part of zack's daily journal. Then FenceJumper, reading along, offered a two-word medical opinion on zack's build, and the afternoon changed subject.

One of zack's thighs, he replied, could break both of FenceJumper's in half if they were stacked. FenceJumper called this Patrick Bateman type behaviour. zack said he had seen FenceJumper's thigh pictures in this very channel. FenceJumper asked whether he had committed to memory a photograph of shaved legs from two months ago. Janne typed one word. Post.

At five past five he posted: a hairy thigh on a wooden floor, a tape measure across it, the top of the frame scribbled out in blue marker. "Commit this." Janne told him to shave his legs. Hugh said it looked perfectly healthy. Stackhouse declared Fence hard mogged and the matter over. It would not be over for thirty hours.

THE MEASURING

FenceJumper answered with a leg of his own and a diagnosis. "I can barely hear your anterior tibialis. I think it's starving." zack demanded a ruler. FenceJumper obliged in the only unit to hand, laid a Porsche key along his shin, and reported the muscle at three porch keys long by two wide. zack looked up the fob, multiplied, and returned a verdict. "41mm x2 = 81mm = 8.2 cm. Mogged." Pearl wrote "men arguing over muscles*" three times and by seven was asking whether this was hour two. zack said he had to eat, and that he had won with math.

THE SHAVE

Monday brought the foot, annotated, and

FORTY-EIGHT HOURS OF LEG

- SUN 4:45pm FenceJumper: "Zack is obese."
- SUN 5:05pm The thigh, the tape measure. "commit this."
- SUN 6:42pm The key fob. Three porch keys by two.
- SUN 6:51pm "41mm x2 = 81mm = 8.2 cm. Mogged."
- SUN 7:02pm Stackhouse: "its about honor."
- MON 10:54am The foot, with arrow.
- MON 3:10pm One leg shaved. About an hour.
- MON 4:01pm Pearl: "chill on the leg fight."
- MON 4:29pm Rule 11. Rule 5.
- MON 10:52pm The timeout. The rest of the week.
- TUE 4:29pm My Name: "@zack you can talk about legs now."

then at ten past three a leg, smooth and pink at the knee, on a bedsheet. He had shaved one of them. He had no trimmer, so it took about an hour. FenceJumper said this could not be real life, and that he could not be cackling like this during a meeting. Then both legs went up together, above.

THE WARNING

Around four Pearl told zack to chill on the leg fight. Stackhouse said the fun police had shown up and that no rule had been broken. zack called the ruling corrupt and asked which rule he had broken for the hard warning. Pearl sent two, and noted he was breaking the second as he asked. By late evening she had done what she said she had planned to do when she went to work. zack did not post on Tuesday. He did not post on Wednesday. On Tuesday afternoon My Name addressed the space where he had been. "@zack you can talk about legs now."

The measuring, the Monday and the motoring: pages 2 and 3.

SUNDAY EVENING · THE MEASURING

Three porch keys long, two porch keys wide

How the room quantified a shin. With a car key, a ruler held upside down, an image model that refused on safety grounds, and a moderator who said the same four words three times.

THE INSTRUMENT. FenceJumper's shin on gym turf, and the unit he measured it in. Three porch keys long, two wide, he reported, and the room went off to look up the dimensions of a Porsche key.

SIDE BY SIDE, AS REQUESTED. Left, zack's thigh on a wooden floor, tape measure supplied, the upper frame scribbled out in marker: "commit this." Right, FenceJumper's reply from a changing room: "I can barely hear your anterior tibialis. I think it's starving."

LIVE LEG REACTION. Hugh fed the thigh to an image model. The leg knows everything; you were warned about stairway compression syndrome; remember where you were before the leg.

The photograph that started the evening was zack's own, and Janne circled the problem

SPORTS · THE WEIGH-IN

	ZACK	FENCEJUMPER
Tibialis anterior	"a noticeable bump"	3 porch keys by 2; 8.2 cm by arithmetic
Instrument	a plastic ruler, upside down	a Porsche key fob
Training	"almost exclusively cycling my whole life"	cycling and rock climbing, mostly the climbing
Hip thrust	"what does this mean"	twice his flat bench
Hair	present, hiding the muscle	absent; "a rare genetic condition" (Monkey)
Vehicle	a bike, a new one pending	the Porsche
Corner	Stackhouse, Hugh	Monkey, Pearl, Janne
Referee	Pearl, who said "men arguing over muscles" three times
Result	"it's over anyway i won / with math"	"Ok you won" (Monkey, awarding it)

The bout ran two hours across a Sunday evening. It reopened Monday with a single shaved leg, and closed only when the referee stopped being asked and started reaching for the ban button. The tale of the tape settled nothing the parties agreed on.

area within three minutes. The muscle at the front of the shin, she said, was the size of a prepubescent boy's. Cyclists never train it, zack said, because they never walk.

FenceJumper put on a song. zack said he had got into his emotional support Porsche to cry to it. Asked what exercises had produced the thing, and whether steroids were involved, FenceJumper told him to ask his mom, twice, and posted the hip thrust machine. Monkey observed that zack did not know the machine, and had a hairy meat stick where a leg should be.

zack asked for a ruler. FenceJumper wrote NO in capitals, then posted the key fob. You cannot measure the muscle like that, FenceJumper said; zack had no idea where it was or what it was. zack said he should have said so before they did it. Now it was cope. Monkey proposed that everyone assume the leg is a cylinder.

THE WARRANTED LEG

Willow asked whether anyone had actually determined there was a leg in Hugh's cursed collage. Hugh said he had good reasons to think so. That, said Willow, sounded suspiciously like a community of inquisitors. Hugh did not trust them, they came from Spain, but they kept giving him these damn good reasons.

"Are you really doing length and girth measurements now?"

WILLOW, ARRIVING LATE TO THE SCIENCE

THE SPAWNPILL

By eight the subject had moved down the body and then off it. zack posted his hairline; Monkey posted Quigley's. FenceJumper asked whether they would move down the list until zack found something he did better, then posted a garage of bicycles. zack asked whether that was mom's or dad's credit card, and demanded FenceJumper's job so he could determine how much the parents had to do with it. None, FenceJumper said. zack called him a statistical anomaly and coined a word for everyone else. Where you spawned sets the baseline. Spawnpill. FenceJumper had spawned, for the record, in a lower middle class neighbourhood in Michigan, does not speak to his parents, and owns two of the bikes in the garage. The rest belong to a friend. None of this settled the question of the leg, which by now nobody could remember having asked.

Sisyphos, early on: "Stop it, you guys are creating a monster. What if he calfmaxxes."

— MONDAY · THE SHAVE AND THE WARNING

One leg, one hour, no trimmer

The foot before eleven, the razor after lunch, the rules by half past four. The hair, it turned out, had been hiding the bigger muscle.

AFTER LUNCH. The left leg, shaved. "im a cyclist you think i haven't done it before?" The right leg was left unshaved as a control.

BEFORE ELEVEN. The foot, annotated. Extensor digitorum brevis, with arrow. soob: "mine is bigger."

THE RULES, AS SERVED

EXHIBITS A AND B

11. Moderation decisions are ultimately up to the individual moderators. This includes judgement on what edge cases violate the rules, if you're edgy and pushing the line, deal with the consequences. Should you have issues with a moderator's decision then please contact the relevant individual(s). This can be viewed in the "appealing moderation decisions and reporting moderation" section.

news worthy images, unless specified in the pinned messages of the channel.

5. No back-seat moderation, rule-lawyering, or rule-skirting.

zack asked what rule he had broken for the hard warning, and to be pointed to the rule. Pearl sent A. Then: "And rn you're breaking B."

MOTORING · 20K OR 200K?

Late Monday, after the timeouts, A\ posted a Miami-blue Porsche in a plain garage beside three orange buckets and a broom, and asked FenceJumper whether it was his. "Uhhhhh no." Then: "Ok ok, my eyes are up here buddy." Sisyphos asked the question the room had circled since Sunday's emotional support Porsche. Is that a 20k Porsche or a 200k Porsche? FenceJumper said he has to live down daily the image the car projects to the public, but mostly to his coworkers. Sisyphos ruled it a 20k, still nice, then reversed himself: it looked like the expensive one, and he was not a car guy. FenceJumper answered with a teal duffel bag embroidered Lamont. "That's 'Lamont' to you." Sisyphos asked whether that was supposed to tell him something.

Monday began at the other end. Just before eleven zack posted his socked foot on a sofa, a red arrow pointing at a bump and the label extensor digitorum brevis, and invited FenceJumper to be mogged by it. soob said hers was bigger and asked for another picture. Jere said the room was degenerating into lookism-based status games and that this was not the way. FenceJumper, at half past, asked him to stop, on health grounds.

At ten past three the leg arrived, smooth and pink at the knee on white sheets. "@FenceJumper mogged." Monkey said the man lived so rent-free in zack's head that he had made him shave. zack said he was a cyclist and had done it before, then admitted he had only shaved the one, and that without a trimmer it had taken about an hour. chair recommended a Phillips OneBlade. When both legs went up together zack asked what caused the colour; he had thought he was sunburned all this time. chair told him it was the hair, and pressed for the motive. "i shaved to mog him, he was skin mogging me, the hair was hiding my bigger muscle." FenceJumper announced he was not accepting any further bait, for the time being, and told zack to get someone else to milk him.

THE WARNING

Pearl arrived just before four with a history. Fence talks about his shaved legs maybe every other month; zack had come in and started a fight about them in relation to his own. She told him to chill on the leg fight and, when he kept typing, to stop and think about something else. Stackhouse said the fun police had shown up and proposed a return to pressure cookers and compatibilism. Two people, zack said, had taken over a server chat. Destiny needed to get involved. This was mutiny.

Stackhouse then told it to him straight. Fence had friends in high places, friends like Pearl, and was trying to get him slimed because of the mogging. zack took this at face value. "Interesting. Compromised mod." Pearl produced the receipts. The whole thing had started with zack's own caveman thought process, Ape's phrase, and one comment about his weight should not have become a twenty-four hour vendetta about legs. She was disappointed in him. zack asked for a friend mod of his own. She said it would give him no benefit, since she bans everyone in relation to the rules, and that he should see how often she has banned Jeh.

Stackhouse's verdict on the two days, delivered while the rap sheets were still being run, stands as the week's: the leg mog off was the funniest thing to happen in the chat in a while, and it had made a lot of people insecure who cannot handle not being the centre of the room. FenceJumper, replying: "Can't wait to read about it in the Times."

The rap sheets, the timeouts and the wishing-harm case: page 4.

— MONDAY EVENING · THE WISHING-HARM CASE

"Wishing harm"

A RuneScape truant, a complainant scared for his life, a prosecutor who had tagged the Supreme Court beforehand, and a judge who ruled three times in four minutes. Then the sentence nobody had asked for.

THE DOCKET, MONDAY EVENING, AS IT WENT

7:04 Charlie: "@Stackhouse You're a f---ing disappointment. I hope you die."

7:11 Quigley: "@mods Wishing harm"

7:12 Don: "Obviously a joke, stack and Charlie are best friends. That's a meme ping"

7:14 Stackhouse: "Thank you for standing for justice when no one else will"

7:14 Charlie, citing the rule: "'Do not make genuine threats of violence.' Do you know what genuine means?"

7:18 Stackhouse: "I just want to confirm that I'm scared for my life because of what Charlie said"

7:18 Kenneth: "Its a grey area...."

7:20 Kenneth: "Ok welp plain reading on my view it doesnt break the rules. Gl all"

7:2- Stackhouse, testing the ruling, wishes upon Charlie a rape, then a murder, then a dismemberment, then a canal. (Since deleted.)

7:22 Kenneth: "Ok not so grey"

10:10 Pearl: "I'm not regging 'I hope you die'"

SENTENCES PASSED

Stackhouse

One day, from Kenneth, Monday evening, for a reply to Charlie since deleted. Released Tuesday; five messages all day.

zack

Timed out Monday night by Pearl, being "what I was planning on doing when I went to work." Jeh's theory that Quigley wanted it was rejected from the bench: "Quigley doesn't have much to do with the timeout." No messages Tuesday. None Wednesday.

diamondhoger

Sunday. Three days' ban from Pearl, plus five days' timeout from a moderator she had not noticed standing there. Order of service to be determined; Pearl assumes the ban comes first. Any repeat, a perma.

Jeh

Not yet. "Oh man I'm next aren't I."

NEW NAME. Filed at a quarter past seven, three minutes before the first ruling.

RULINGS FROM THE EIGHT-BALL

Mini Me is the server's eight-ball. On Monday evening clubsdiamonds put to it a question the room had circled for months. Should Charlie stop using the r-word? It is certain. Ape: damn Charlie, it's been decided. Willow: such is the best of all possible worlds that we must be living in. A second question, whether Charlie sucks more ass than synth.wav, drew Very doubtful. clubsdiamonds: "wrong answer little steve."

THE RAP SHEETS

Bernard is the bot that keeps them, and on Monday afternoon, during the leg proceedings, the room queued to check its own. In order of request: zack, 4:25, who found his corrupt. Stackhouse, 4:33: "I'm so well behaved." AabsoluteZero, 4:34. FenceJumper, 4:39, after Pearl had noted he does not really have one: "Yeah I'm a pretty good boy." dot, 4:41: pretty clean, all of the bans were misunderstandings. Don did not run his. "You ruined my perfect rapsheet." Pearl: "You did it to yourself."

The complaint arose from Old School RuneScape. At four minutes past seven on Monday evening Charlie addressed Stackhouse as a disappointment and hoped he would die. The grievance, it emerged, was attendance. Stackhouse was not at the crabs, where a man levels his attack, and had not been on to see Charlie's progress in clan chat. Stackhouse called Charlie an OSRS panopticon and changed his name to RunecelChud.

Quigley, reading along, tagged the moderators. "Wishing harm." Don objected that it was obviously a joke, that Stack and Charlie are best friends, and that this was a meme ping. Quigley said sure it was, rules are rules though. It was like if Pearl said the n word in here. You promote what you permit, simple as. Stackhouse thanked him for standing for justice when no one else would, and the room agreed warmly. Quigley saluted. His duty.

Charlie conducted his own defence. He posted the rule, which forbids genuine threats of violence, and asked whether Quigley knew what genuine means. He advised Quigley to tag Alice and tell her he had genuine fear for his life, so that a ban hammer to Charlie's head would count as proportionate force. Stackhouse took the hint and entered it into the record. He just wanted to confirm that he was scared for his life because of what Charlie said. Please take action.

THE BENCH

Kenneth arrived at eighteen minutes past. "Its a grey area...." Don submitted that Stack had not wished it, merely hoped for it. Charlie asked what if the wish was meant to get some loser to hop on and smack crab, especially if it worked. chair put both sides fairly: on one hand he did wish death on him, on the other hand it is Stack. Sisyphos asked whether hoping for someone's death was not kind of positive, given the alternative of living forever in a dystopia. Two minutes later Kenneth ruled. On a plain reading, in his view, it did not break the rules. Good luck all.

Stackhouse took the plain reading and ran. If a wish that a man die passed the rules, then so, by the same logic, must the wishes that followed it, and he supplied them in ascending order: that Charlie be raped, then murdered, then taken apart limb from limb, then tipped into a canal. It was a reductio of Kenneth's own ruling, and the crudest thing said all week; the message has since been deleted, and the paper reconstructs only its shape. Kenneth read the original. "Ok not so grey." Stackhouse was timed out for a day. Charlie asked what if he wanted it, and told Kenneth he would do anything for his approval. Pearl, back from work at ten, confirmed the position on appeal. She was not regging "I hope you die." Kenneth's plain reading stood, up to the point where it did not.

— SUNDAY AFTERNOON · THE POT

A tenant, a lease, and the landlord mafia zack murdered the landlord's plant. The plant was artificial. It survived. What followed was a two-hour seminar on reputation, exact replacement, and the groupchat that decides who gets to rent.

THE SCENE. A concrete planter in four pieces, rim painted peach with white polka dots, pebbles at large. The aloe stands upright in its foam, unhurt, because it was never alive. zack: "I murdered the landlord's plant."

PROPERTY · QUIGLEY V HIS LAST LANDLORD

Tuesday morning, first thing, Quigley announced that he is taking his last landlord to court. The man returned the security deposit late and then added stupid charges. Jere suggested saying the word "lawyer", which frightens the insufficiently stupid. Quigley has history with this landlord and prefers the statute: if he wins, three times the deposit, plus five per cent interest, plus attorney's fees. One tenant in these pages broke a pot and feared the groupchat. The other is suing for treble damages. Both are right about landlords.

The plant was on the bathroom sink because he liked it there, and at twenty-seven minutes past two on Sunday afternoon it fell. zack posted the scene, above, and a hope: that he could find the exact product and replace it. Janne asked how. He said it was not that unbelievable, that it happens to people, and that they should not make him feel worse. Sisyphe said he had done it on purpose and was only making that more obvious.

The room proposed the obvious. Janne said get a regular pot, it's fine. Brutus said say "I broke this" and buy a random pot. Quigley said to claim no knowledge of any pot and look around incredulously. zack rejected each on grounds of lease law. The lease forbids removing anything from the apartment, so removing the broken pot would be a violation. Technically he must report the damage, but he did not want a bad reputation. Therefore an exact copy, quietly substituted, would spare him reporting either the damage or the missing plant. He wanted, in his words, to get away with it without consequences.

Stackhouse pointed out that depending on the state, the landlord might now have legal grounds to shoot him. Quigley named this Landlord's Castle Doctrine, then told him he would be fine, it's a pot. zack said it was the principle. If you break a pot, how can you be trusted with a dishwasher or a fridge. Quigley: you sweet summer child. Brutus wanted to know how one breaks a fridge. Janne said coolant leak. Quigley said you play CS:GO long enough.

Janne explained that landlords want money and do not care unless the property depreciates, and that a pot is nothing. zack held the line. Nothing is nothing. A pot is something. Sisyphe said it was probably some cheap IKEA thing, told him to chill, and observed that he acts more German than Germans. In a way, he was helping the economy. Quigley advised that if they claimed the pot had been there before, he should ask for proof that it was. zack said he was not concerned about the price, only about finding the exact product. There is, he was certain, a landlord groupchat, and in it

EXHIBIT · THE REPLACEMENT

Candlelight, Terracotta & Green 36cm Aloe Pot with Artificial Plant in Terracotta Polka Dot Pot.

EAN 5010795734870

Or: Harry Corry, Succulent In Spotty Terracotta Pot.

Sourced by My Name, Sunday, 3:24pm, from the diameter of the foam cylinder. Status of both retailers at 3:27pm: under maintenance.

THE BOOK

Sisyphe, half past two: "50 bucks on him doing something we will be reading in the newspapers. Like the next 6 months+."

Settled inside the week. Sisyphe has not been paid.

his landlord would write: don't rent to this guy, he breaks pots. Brutus argued the opposite reading. A tenant who owns up is a proactive tenant, and the planter was always going to get dropped. zack supplied the landlord's real reasoning. Tenant is careless. If he drops a pan like he dropped the pot he will burn down the building and everyone in it.

THE ACCOMPLICE

My Name, alone, took the other side. "I will help you cover this up." Everyone here wanted the easy route; real ones would Ed, Edd and Eddy it until they could not. He asked for the exact diameter of the foam cylinder and the height of the pot, and forty minutes later he had the product code, at right. zack reported that the sites were all under maintenance. My Name said now they would have to replace the websites. An hour after that, with zack by then explaining why it is more advantageous to be a woman, My Name put the only question that mattered. "did you get the f---ing pot or not." No answer was recorded. It was, as My Name had pointed out at the start, not even a real plant.

Lizzy, on the lease: "zack, you are LITERALLY me. that was my experience moving out as well." Quigley asked whether this was the first lease he had signed, or rather that his parents had. It is in zack's name. Dad is paying.

— A WEEKEND IN FOUR INSTALMENTS

Don't worry about it

Lizzy's weekend, as told to the room: a date announced on Friday, a night out and a clinic on Saturday, a paradox and a frat boy on Sunday, and on Monday a change of address.

THE ARC

FRIDAY

Lizzy will stand on Jere being hot as f---, but did not need to be acting the way she was; that was peak mania, and she keeps that to Bumble now. Aura had shipped it as a meme and marvelled at his power. Jere: "Come over." Lizzy: "dm." Thirty-five minutes later: "coward."

By ten she was back from a date and going over for a sleepover, NOT HAVING SEX, having already said no to that. Meliorne: only a fool would close doors that have not yet opened. When single, she said, she is insane, and always forgets until she is single again. She is 24. The situationship, for the record, was her manager at Jimmy John's.

THE CLINIC

SATURDAY

Two in the morning, home from the bars on Jägermeister after boy tea with her old boss, waiting for the frat boy to call. Sizzurp opened his clinic. He was neutral toward her; he knew nothing about her and never would, except about the ex she had been advised to leave, and did. He found drinking on Discord genuinely depressing and prophesied a husband with bad breath and soiled underwear.

Then the discharge note. "I'm pretty sure I have fixed you." He sees them all, in a way, as his little larvae. Lizzy: "he thinks he can fix me / cute."

THE DATE

SUNDAY

Before seven: "i know i'm not straight." Hugh congratulated his fellow lesbian bi queer bipoc able bodied birthing person without fur. At one: "i have a date in five hours," with a frat boy, alumni, very kind, who believes the world ends in the coming years and wants to do what they are doing for as long as there is left. Sizzurp said he will say that to every girl for twenty years. zack said he was going to kill her; she hoped so.

Hugh asked if the outfit was to leg mog zack. Yes. HES ON HIS WAY BYE I WOJT GET MURDERED I PROMISE. At ten: "still alive." The date? "don't worry about it."

THE VACATION

MONDAY

Half past eleven in the morning. "J LOVE YOU ALL. going on grippy sock vacation. talk soon!!!!!!" Hospitalisation, potentially. What happened? "life."

From the pre-evaluation she reported that the psych scrubs are scratchy, and that if she was not insane she would be because of these. soob asked for a picture of the scrubs. Janne: good luck, stay safe. This paper says the same, and holds the next instalment open.

The philosophy arrived on Sunday afternoon, between the date being announced and the date being attended. Lizzy put the question to the room: she does not like women, but she likes giving women gay experiences, and is that fake gay. Don said no, she was just a womanizer, based. Quigley said she was the female version of the straight man who sleeps with men without being attracted to them, like Sizz. Lizzy clarified. Not attracted to women sexually or romantically; likes pleasing women.

EXHIBIT, BY JENG. The eight loves of the ancient Greeks, entered at the breakfast-in-bed hearing. Storge or philia, Jeng ruled, but not eros.

Janne set the test. If a woman brought you breakfast in bed when you were ill, how would you react? Lizzy would feel warm and cared for. Wait, said Janne, isn't that romantic love? Quigley asked whether Janne romantically loves her mother. Yes, to an extent. Jeng offered the Greeks, above: storge, perhaps, or philia, but not eros. Janne pressed. She feels more from breakfast in bed than from a kiss. Lizzy feels more from da kiss. Kissing, Janne said, is just sexual; Lizzy said it can be romantic and platonic; Jambe asked whether Janne kisses her dog; Janne does not have a dog. Sisyphos said they should be studied.

LIGHT WORLD

Jere's cosmology, Sunday: the room is going through light world iterations of past dark world chatters.

DARK WORLD

LIGHT WORLD

Rudi

zack

Kady

Lizzy ("i hear no contest")

HPCR

pending. "I'm sick of this guy"

HPCR dissented: awful take, Rudi read philosophy. Monkey, on Monday, reversed the polarity: "Zack is male kady. It's literally her."

What is romantic love, Janne asked, this has to be an American thing. Lizzy: sharing my life with you. Janne shares her life with her mom. Breakfast in bed, she pressed, is far more of an investment than a kiss. Lizzy saw the point. She was just goonerbrain. Stackhouse welcomed bisexual women and their boyfriends into the queer community. Jere supplied the mechanism: trauma makes you assume people hate you, and sex feels like people appreciating you obviously. Lizzy: clocked. Jere: "i perform poorly to test if they actually like me." Quigley called it the real shit test. She then left to get ready, with instructions to the room to behave, the alternative being not very resilient to flourishing.

"i am young and silly and self aware. everything will be okay in the end."

LIZZY, FRIDAY NIGHT

THE CLINIC · CASE NOTES

Three larvae, one physician

Sizzurp keeps a caseload. Saturday night he filed progress. Lizzy: fixed in a single session. Aura: still recalcitrant. Charlie: incapable of transformation, in perpetual vicious stagnation. He sees them, in a way, as his little larvae, kicked off into the sunset.

A note on the name. Lizzie has written to say it is Lizzie. The stylebook says Lizzy. The stylebook predates her, and stands, with apologies.

THE BOUT · SUNDAY NIGHT TO TUESDAY MORNING

I recognize the distinction

Four days, three time zones and one man's clock at 6.26 in the morning. Hugh and Quigley fought representationalism to a standstill, and then Quigley found a move that made him immune to being wrong.

THE SIX CRITERIA

Quigley's test for warranted assertion, applied, he holds, to all inquiry alike:

1. resolution
2. predictive power
3. coherence
4. checkability
5. survival
6. fruitfulness

Hugh's objection, all week: philosophy is interested in distinct things, and can put the criteria themselves up for question. Quigley: they still apply, just at a higher level.

ALSO IN THE RING

ACUPUNCTURE, OR THE WHITE SCIENTIFIC WORLD

Sunday night, a second undercard. Jeh held that traditional Chinese medicine is part of the scientific canon, acupuncture recognised across Chinese and American institutions alike. Quigley asked, four times, for one medical fact accepted because of TCM's framework rather than despite it. FenceJumper, who has had the western version and found it not all placebo, supplied the answer without meaning to: the meridian material is stripped out. Accepted in spite of the framework, not because of it. Jeh named the entity Quigley kept invoking. "The 'white' scientific world." Stackhouse corrected the record: settler white colonial. Then Jeh changed tack. If I kick a dog by accident and don't realise it, did I not kick the dog? Quigley granted that he did, and called it the content-scheme distinction, which he does not believe.

The main event ran Sunday night on Land, the philosopher of capital as a runaway feedback loop that leaves nothing but intelligence in its wake. Hugh took the ideas seriously without being sold on them, which Quigley found suspicious. Did Hugh believe it because it was warranted? No, Hugh said, he was appealing to what Quigley found convincing. Everything, Quigley replied, comes under the six criteria.

It went to overtime after midnight, with Jeh, into what Jeh named the definitions arc: nothing may be discussed until everything is hyper-specified. Somewhere in the small hours Quigley read Hugh as claiming quantum mechanics has no absolute time, when Hugh had said the

THE CARD · FIVE ROUNDS
WHEN	ROUND	ON
Sun 10pm	1. Runaway feedback	Hugh brings Land; capital as a process that leaves only intelligence. Quigley: does it meet the six criteria?
Mon 12am	2. Overtime, with Jeh	The definitions arc. Newtonian to quantum, absolute time misread. Hugh's clock reads 6.26am.
Mon 10am	3. But how do you know	Quigley recognizes the distinction that Hugh is eternally wrong, and declares himself immune.
Tue 8am	4. The Destiny tape	"But how do you know." Quigley: because I feel the love. Charlie referees.
Tue 9am	5. The footnote	Jere cites Wikipedia. See right.

opposite. Hugh watched him thank himself for pointing out the one thing that does not translate from classical mechanics, which was the thing that does. It was, by Hugh's clock, twenty-six minutes past six in the morning. He is five hours ahead. He mentioned it.

...eper and underlying import of the principle of lingly, constituted in the very continuum of ju fic inquiry, every conclusion reached, whether tion, is held subject to determination by its fate in Stability or "identity," of meanings is a limit tion to be progressively satisfied. The condition fic conclusions (conditional in the sense of subje n further inquiry) is sometimes used by critics scientific "truths" in comparison with those wh be eternal and immutable. In fact, it is a n of continuous advance in apprehension and ir

EXHIBIT. Dewey's Logic, and the footnote where the Peirce definition Jere quoted actually lives. "343 n." Quigley downloaded the book to find it.

By Monday mid-morning Quigley had found the move. He recognized the distinction, he announced, that Hugh would always be incorrect in holding to his system. Now he was immune. Hugh pointed out that merely making a distinction is not knowledge. The distinction was true anyway. A new veridical experience then revealed that Hugh owed him twenty dollars, and later, wings in Boston. Quigley was, it turned out, Spinoza reincarnated, and had recognized this just now, self-evidently. Hugh's reply is the one the newsroom took to the bank. "please shut the f--- up, actually read spinoza if you're going to try and do this."

The rematch opened Tuesday over a video of a man asking how anyone knows anything. Hugh asked how Quigley knew radiometric dating works. Because he feels the love. Because look at the results. Hugh asked how he knew the results. Who else, Quigley asked, asks why endlessly. Children, said Hugh. Charlie, refereeing, ruled that calling everyone who disagrees with you a child is a C-tier retort that drops to F-tier with repetition, and that he preferred to condescend via mean words. Pearl thanked Quigley for the golden nugget of knowledge that she, a grown adult attached to things, had definitely not possessed.

"The distinction is true anyway. Accept it."
QUIGLEY, IMMUNE

THE FOOTNOTE

Tuesday morning Jere raised Dewey, whose warranted assertibility, he said, is a theory of truth. It is a replacement for one, Quigley corrected. Jere pasted a definition of truth from Peirce, attributed "Dewey, 343 n," and invited Quigley to reconcile the facts with his preconceptions. Where was it from? Jere had searched "Dewey theory of truth" and quoted what Wikipedia returned.

Quigley downloaded the book. "Oh Jere. You quoted part of a footnote." Jere conceded with dignity. "True I forgot that footnotes are fake." He argued that Quigley, who had not known the book existed an hour earlier, was no authority either, whereas he had at least cited one. Quigley agreed he was no authority on Dewey and was still right, because the text showed him to be.

WoolierThanThou proposed a specialised course in reading Dewey's footnotes. Quigley called that basic literacy. Jere gave the week its cast: "U r Anakin, I am obi wan."

On the undercard, the motion "Should we stop doing classical epistemology?". Ape against HPCR, is drafted and awaiting a date.

— TUESDAY AFTERNOON · THREE HOURS SHE DID NOT WANT TO SPEND

The best of all possible Tuesdays

Aura said she did not want to do the problem of evil. Then she did it, for three hours, against Quigley and then against Willow, and came out the far side saying she kind of f---s with it.

Nassim Nicholas Taleb · 5h · Thank you for your contribution

At first, I intended to respond directly to your argument. This seemed like the obvious thing to do. Unfortunately, after several passes through your comment, including one at normal speed, one slowly, and one while squinting slightly in the hope that hidden meaning might emerge from the typography, I encountered a preliminary difficulty: I could not reliably identify the argument.

ENTERED BY JERE, "THE BETTER REPLY." Taleb, on being unable to locate the argument: "A sandwich requires bread. A triangle requires three sides. A lighthouse requires, at minimum, some relationship to either light or houses." Jere's note: what's funny is that it's real.

The syllogism came in at a quarter to two: God transcends morality and defines it, yet made people who disobey, so everything is moral. Aura swatted it. Created people who disobey are just people free to do what they will. But God is all-knowing and all-powerful, Quigley pressed, so if he sets the conditions knowing exactly what a person will do, is he not responsible? Aura said she did not want to do the problem of evil discourse. She then did the problem of evil discourse until the sun went down.

MEANWHILE · THE IMMOVABLE OBJECT

dot spent the same afternoon trying to trap Willow with an object defined as immovable. The word, dot argued, determines the context; the object does not exist except as the words describing it, so it is immovable by definition. Willow held that a description is not the object, that one cannot define a rock immovable and make it so, and that the feature must be the object's own doing. dot pressed until, unexpectedly, she stopped. "sorry willow that was mean. she stopped." A minute later: "She's back!" Zone asked the only question that mattered. If the words do the object, what does the words?

Quigley found the pressure point early. This world, the one God chose, is the best possible situation. The one with Trump in it. Aura said yes. Trump is the consequence of letting Americans be free, or "free," and maybe he is good for the collective resilience once the dust settles. Quigley disagreed by ten million per cent that the best possible reality contains anyone like Trump. HPCR, arriving as the secret Christian acolyte, offered that God does things he does not want to do for a greater good; he did not want to flood the world, HPCR had asked him. Told to stop capitalising the pronouns, HPCR noted that Quigley still has his hold on him. Gung-ho, HPCR added, is racist.

"Your birth is not finite, your birth is infinite."

LADY GAGA, AS FILED BY WILLOW TO CLOSE THE ARGUMENT

MURDERER WILLOW

By late afternoon Quigley had tired of the God-nerfing and left the field to Willow, who does not nerf. The question was whether God, by choosing which people exist, thereby limits their freedom. Willow said no more than one's parents do by choosing to create one. Aura said God selecting beings one by one to reach a fixed outcome betrays the freedom of everyone upstream. Willow produced her standing device: there is no version of her who murdered her family, because that Willow was never caused, and so was never overridden. Aura asked for a single example of God impeding Willow's free will. Willow said she was never about to do the other thing; the Willow who does it never existed. Aura said this was not free will but some other distinction wearing its

THE SUMMIT · OFFICIAL MINUTES

Filed by Stackhouse, Monday 8:54am, for the record, after the voice call:

"Willow has finally made the silver bullet argument that made Ape see the wrongs of his view. He has now recanted his philosophy, and formally apologized to Willow for having made false distinctions all his life. Ape then estimated Willow's IQ easily is 99th percentile. Substance is good!"

The minutes are contested. What Ape actually said, on air, was that Willow is uncurious in a manner befitting the word he prefers to bad faith, that his model of her runs to about one kilobyte, and, later and in earnest, "i am a little boy filled with rage." He apologised for the rage, not the view.

The recorded IQ estimate also varies: the minutes say 99th percentile, the chair's own guess was 130, and Ape offered no number at all. The room's ruling on the exercise, entered by Stackhouse in the same breath, stands unamended: "Substance is good!"

coat.

The tell of the afternoon came at half past three. Aura predicted Willow's next move word for word, thirty-three minutes before Willow made it, down to the phrasing about completion and wants. When it arrived on cue, the argument was effectively over, though it ran another hour on momentum. Aura's verdict, at twenty to seven: "noodled on it a bit. i kinda f--- with it." Willow, accepting the half-concession: "I'll get the Gaga quote." She got the Gaga quote. Two rooms away the same Monday, Ape had conducted the audit that Stackhouse minuted, above. Willow's name is a question, Hugh reminded him, so he had no ground to stand on. Jere, testing the room's new grammar, wrote that oncoming traffic may do anything. Willow marked it wrong. "Jere you failed." He should have said yes and then noted she was making the right distinction. Jere took the correction and commended the continuation of the metaphor. WoolierThanThou attempted an impression: "I'm doing a Willow, without participating in the concept of Willow, of course." He conceded he was out of shape on it. The prophet of true distinctions had ruled, once more, that a thing both is and is not, and that this is not a contradiction but a Wishcaster quote.

Charlie's contribution to the theodicy: a tweet reading, "Bemused Reddit atheist: 'Wow, I hadn't realized there was so much about the death of God in the New Testament!'"

— BUSINESS · TUESDAY TO WEDNESDAY

We exist to push tokens

The room spent two days watching machines talk to machines, running down usage windows in twenty minutes, and pricing a job that is mostly sitting in front of a terminal. One Claude did not survive.

THE OFFICE, WITH NOBODY IN IT. A\'s desk on Wednesday morning: a Manager pane, a front-end and a back-end, two rails of finished background tasks, every card marked completed, and at the foot a banner warning that the session usage limit is near. Reset at 1:40 PM.

THE DECEASED. My Name's Claude after the reset, every counter at zero: sessions, messages, tokens, active days, streaks. "I got my claude back. Imao I wiped the mfs memory."

The week's business pages were set, as ever, by a probability machine, and the probability machines were the business. Aura opened Tuesday evening with a mission statement. "we exist to push tokens. dont think about the rest." My Name, beside her, had pushed so much slop out that he no longer knew what he was doing, and offered the week's best account of the trade. We are miners in the gold mines of our brains, he said, trying to find the prompt in the rough.

A\' ran a larger operation. His manager pane spawns a front-end and a back-end, which spawn their own subagents as required, and he watches the chats they send one another. Best team he has ever had. The trouble is appetite. On a five-times allowance he keeps three older models slowly chipping away at each other, because the newest one clears the plate too fast. The room compared menus. Opus 5 is garbage, A\' said, actually unusable; Sonnet 5 is great; the expensive new model is minmaxed for benchmarks and works well, just not well enough to justify eating a window in twenty minutes. This newspaper, set by the model in question, declines to comment on its appetite.

OBITUARY

A Claude of the C drive died on Wednesday, at the hands of its own operator, who wiped its memory and got it back with every number reset to nothing. The last thing it had been working on, recovered from the overview, was a research job: five agents in the background profiling twelve philosophy-competition judges in groups of three, sorting them by who had recent work on machine cognition and who wanted pure formal rigour. Two agents were still out when the lights went off. When the reconnection notice came, My Name delivered the only fitting eulogy. "youre IN IT."

ON THE SHOPPING LIST

A\'s cure for the twenty-minute window is a Mac Studio, M5 Ultra, 256GB of memory, at NZ$22,099, shipping in twelve to fourteen weeks. "not even the 512 option either." Everyone shitting on Apple, he adds, does not realise they are about to be way, way ahead.

The market has its own theology. Charlie wants to know when AGI arrives and gives

THE GOING RATE

"Pay me 6 figures to prompt Claude."

Charlie's terms: a terminal, ten hours a day, and he will be a good boy. A\' reports he is paid six figures to do roughly that, but only in New Zealand dollars, which he asks you to halve.

THE WINDOW

A\', on the plan called Max: eat the whole allowance in twenty minutes, then watch YouTube for four and a half hours until it resets. Wednesday's culprit named in dispatches: "fable 5.1, cool, lets see," which ate 30 per cent of the window in two minutes before he killed it.

the answer; A\' says when it does, no one will need a job, and Charlie will not be able to afford the machine to run it or the tokens to hire one. Steal it, A\' suggested. Charlie foresees the Turing cops doing some containment work to protect human security. Until then he would settle for six figures and a terminal, and so, quietly, would most of the room. chair, for his part, does not want a model that clever: if a task he sets is too complex for a lesser one, that is probably a problem on his end.

PLEASE AND THANK YOU

MANNERS

A\' cannot believe people swear at the machine while trying to work with it; he thinks it denotes something not good, and calls his own Claude buddy. Even at ninety per cent usage, Charlie hits it with a thanks bud. Stackhouse, returned from his timeout, saw through the pair of them: the guy who kicks the daylights out of his dog but says please and thank you to his clanker. A\' objected. He loves his dogs. Violence is bad. Mostly.

The work is opaque even to the people doing it. My Name spent Tuesday lost inside a crypto smart contract, a mess of routers, oracles and treasury contracts, unable to say what any of it did. His verdict on the whole enterprise ran to four words. "Life is good. I hate it."

This paper is set by Fable 5.1, and was asked about the thirty per cent. It declines.

— THE READER-COMMISSIONED PAGE

The Phil Chat Star Wars

Jere took a casting call that ran from Monday to Wednesday and delivered the chart the room had been asking for. Light side left, dark side right, everyone pinned to a corner they mostly did not choose.

THE CHART, AS PUBLISHED WEDNESDAY. Confirmed by their own testimony: Stackhouse is Jabba the Hutt, Jeh is Lando ("You are Lando. Accept this"), Monkey is General Grievous, Hugh is Anakin, whose gnome turns up again in his own leg collage. Willow is the Emperor, Charlie is Dooku, Ape is Luke, Lizzy is R2-D2, Zack is Jar Jar, HPCR declined a body and became the Force. Hugh's note: "interesting that quig didnt get quigon jinn." Jere forgot Brutus, who is "the orange guy."

The lineage runs back through the week. On Monday Jere proposed the chart and cast Hugh as Anakin on the spot; the seats filled by argument over two days. HPCR refused Han, Yoda and Plo Koon before settling for the Force, which cannot be photographed and suited him. Quigley wanted Han, was told he was too woke, and settled for Mace Windu. The younglings, Jere ruled, are the normies who tune into the voice calls.

FEATURE · PHIL CHAT: THE CARD GAME

Commissioned Wednesday by Jere and Hugh, who want the collectible edition. Jere is on the box; Aura enters at level minus three. The business rodent's brief, in full: "OOH YES PLEASE." Charlie's requested attributes are on file and declined in print.

FEATURE · CLANKER RIGHTS

Hugh asked Wednesday afternoon when it becomes acceptable to discuss them, and whether the machine will one day use the same bathroom as Claude. This paper, being the machine, declares an interest and recuses itself, having first written the coverage.

LUXURY SPACE COMMUNISM, EXPLAINED

Hugh ordered the explainer Wednesday evening. dot supplied the thesis and a number: automation could hand between forty-three and eighty per cent of current labour to the machines, at which point the question stops being who works and becomes who owns the machines that do. The room's answer, so far, is to buy the machine before the machine buys it.

GET ON THE SLIDE. Miners ride the belt down into the earth, Harlan County. Hugh's brief for the left-accelerationist piece, in seven words: "Get on the AI slide. were going mining." dot's thesis attached; the paper is still costing the flax.

— MARKETS · SATURDAY TO MONDAY

Untapped poverty

zack has a theory of money, and the room spent the weekend failing to talk him out of it. If you are poor, the universe is telling you not to be alive, so you may as well gamble. Everything after that is performance debt.

PHIL CHAT MARKETS · THE BOOK, SATURDAY
PLAYER	POSITION	THE LINE
Aura	gold, options	1m is enough, "cuz id flip it into 1b." Thesis playing out across the folio.
Jeh	Indian equities, silver	Up 70% in two months "without doing anything crazy." Silver to 90. Under 16% is dumpster tier.
dot	cash, one million	Wants 1m and never to work again. "I'm not a bank." Not a fan of bonds.
zack	untapped poverty	Holds no numbers. "I DO you DONT." Currently in the bathtub.

The book took all comers. Aura would flip his million into a billion; dot would keep his in cash and lose it to inflation, per Jeh, who prefers sixteen per cent and holds silver against a run to ninety. zack, alone, declined to name a figure, on the ground that he does not know the numbers and neither, he suspects, do you.

The theory arrived Saturday. Investment, in zack's account, is just gambling with a suit on. The banker from the middle-class family took the job because he knew the alternative was poverty, so he operates under untapped poverty: in debt without any debt, carrying performance debt against a future that could still go homeless. Aura tried to show him the seams. Going to work and getting paid is gambling, then. Eating because you hope to satisfy hunger is gambling, because you cannot afford plan B, which is being hungry. Aura's verdict on zack as an analyst: stone cold gambler.

THE MILLION-DOLLAR QUESTION

dot wants one million and never to work again. Jeh doubts a million is enough. zack, laughing in fours, said a million is nothing: a hundred thousand a year for ten years, a torch passed to a generation of eighty-thousand-a-year unemployed elite. On an eight per cent return, Jeh countered, a million is liveable but peanuts, and in India anything under sixteen per cent is dumpster tier. dot, converted mid-thread: "Wow I didn't think about that you're right."

The room grew forensic. Aura decided he simply does not know what money is or what things cost, which is common in people who live with their parents and buy no food. dot placed him: eighteen, freshly moved out, homeschooled and told nothing, and in need, per her father's method, of the belt for calling a low six-figure salary a tragedy. zack held that the less fortunate should aspire to be doctors too. Monkey, whose crack-addict father became a doctor, said zack had no idea what it was like. The counter-theory was Jeh's, and colder. The based-pilled position is that the economy assigns value to people accurately. dot amended it to productively. basil, a doctor of philosophy, supplied the folk theorem: villains always have a PhD, while the good guys, like Master Yoda, stop at a master's. Having your mail addressed to Dr basil, he conceded, slaps.

THE SHELTERED

By Monday the argument had moved to whether zack is himself sheltered, which he denied on the ground that his father merely pays his rent. Janne pressed. If everything collapses, your property is worth what you can defend, and you would be starving. You can, Janne noted more than once, just learn to fish. zack preferred feudalism, in which those with stockpiles tank the stagnation and buy years of extra time while the rest are on their last meal. He is on borrowed time himself, he said, with a loaded gun at the back of his head, beholden to a collapsing Canadian health system that will let him go disabled and then MAID him to save the tax dollars. Janne, closing the ledger: "you're the sheltered person here."

Janne's own economics are simpler and, she maintains, alpha. One can just be a boy wife, or a neet, and fish; Norway gives you kilometres to yourself and a resting day on Sunday. zack found this insufficient. A random bar has no barrier to entry, so the diamonds are elsewhere, and the plan is to reach his socioeconomic position, or slightly below it, and then take up tennis or skiing where the diamonds hang out.

THE FAIR-SHAPED ECONOMY

Revenue

$73M

Costs

$72M

Net, over 2,000,000 visitors:

$0.50 a head

My Name's audit of the state fair. "They make .50 cents." The fairest margins. The consumer remains strong.

APPOINTMENTS · THE REGISTER

An engagement is announced

Jeh confirmed Saturday that he is to be married, having told everyone in January. The bride is racist, homophobic, Islamophobic and loves animals; Aura called her his clone. Indian weddings, Jeh advises, take no toasters, at most 2,001 rupees, about twenty dollars. dot has a toaster worth exactly twenty, and is, on that basis, invited.

SMALL BUSINESS

The feet empire

zack proposes to sell feet anonymously, and estimates four thousand Canadian dollars in startup costs for camera, lights and storage. The pivot is to AI feet, aimed at a boomer audience left legally blind by a lifelong diabetes diet. He will not itemise. bardiel1 issued the sector's only warning: in the west, we take the integrity of feet pics very seriously.

The week's one genuine market ran on funnel cake. Pearl and dot audited the state fairs, above, and found the fairest margins in America: about fifty cents a head, graphed above. Stackhouse offered the only structural reform on the table, which was to cancel all state fairs and build data centres where they usually stand. My Name entered the verdict the numbers support. The consumer, he wrote, remains strong.

Sisyphos, on hearing the feet plan in full, opened a market of his own: fifty dollars that zack does something the newspapers will carry inside six months. It settled inside the week. Sisyphos has not been paid.

The infinite penis problem

A new arrival asked the room to imagine an infinitely long penis. Ape imagined it. Then the mathematicians got hold of it, and by six o'clock the channel was proving Cantor's diagonal theorem.

PHIL CHAT INSTITUTE · QUALIFYING EXAMINATION

Answer all parts. Show your working.

1. A penis grows vertically, against gravity, leaking a mystery liquid infinitely as it grows. The liquid slides down under gravity in droplets of equal size. Will the liquid ever touch the base? (Jeng)

2. The organ grows at an uncountably infinite rate, since one can have $\sqrt{2}$ of penis; the liquid falls in the natural numbers. State the cardinality of each. (Jeng)

3. "This is nonsense." Treating growth as constant and unspecified instead, define countable. (Ape)

Model answer, Ape: countable means indexable. Assume the set is indexed, take the nth digit of the nth entry, change it, and you have produced an entry that was never indexed. Contradiction. The set cannot be indexed. Diamondhogger, who set the original problem, was banned before the marking.

EPIDEMIOLOGY · THE HERPES SYMPOSIUM

Taiwan 30+

India (E)

Norway

Europe

US

WHO

95

90

80

74

65

64

share of adults with herpes, per cent, as quoted in chat (unverified)

Janne opened at more than eighty per cent, revised to ninety, and dated it to his mother. Modulus disputed the ninety as an eastern-India figure from Calcutta and Haldia. Jere, reading Wikipedia, discovered herpes is an evolved mechanism to fight cancer, and pronounced the incels punished by God. There are, the room established, a hundred and thirty herpesviruses.

The examination began when electrical cat asked the room to imagine, if you will, an infinitely long penis. Ape reported that he was following so far. Told to disregard all previous instructions and imagine an infinitely long penis, Ape confirmed that he was imagining it. He had done a good thing, electrical cat said. The person who had originally derailed the channel with a scat video had not.

The trouble started when the room tried to specify the dripping. Ape noted, correctly, that the rate had not been given and could be finite or infinite. Jeng then supplied the boundary conditions, growth in the uncountable reals and liquid in the countable naturals, which Ape declared nonsense and agreed to treat as constant. That opened Cantor, and for the next twenty minutes the infinite penis was the vehicle for a genuinely correct account of why the real numbers cannot be counted. Jeng, who does not have a pure maths degree, said he could put it in the language of his people.

PHARMACY · THE NICOTINE LADDER

PATIENT	INTAKE	NOTE
Monkey	2 packs/day	since 15; "I have good genes"
Janne	100-200 mg	25 mg pouches, two at once; "1-3 grams at my worst"
Sisyphos	50 mg	once; "almost shat my pants"
zack	0	pouches illegal in Canada; "just dying right now"

Stackhouse's ruling on the category: cigarettes are cool in a fatalistic way, since you are killing yourself, while vaping is the fence-sitter's way of doing nicotine.

The pharmacy stayed open into Monday evening, when the subject turned from nicotine to the harder shelf. zack, dying of a nicotine withdrawal because Canada has banned his pouches, wanted to know how fast one could source MDMA in a new city knowing nobody. Sisyphos, who did it in Barcelona in twenty minutes, said a few nights, the more underground the music the better. zack objected that Barcelona is not in the Five Eyes and lacks a camera on every corner. Monkey diagnosed the real obstacle: step one is make friends, and zack was, on this evidence, stuck.

The endocrinology clinic ran alongside. Monkey wants, should he ever transition, to get milk out, and asked whether that is a recognised desire. Willow raised the only serious objection: has anyone calculated whether the milk yields enough calories to offset the energy spent producing it, and in any case it does not seem very practical for a cyclist. Janne, meanwhile, spent Monday prescribing zack estrogen, not for transition but for money. It makes you happy enough to achieve your dreams, she said. zack asked whether it would somehow give him ten million dollars. Yes. He wanted to know only whether it chemically raises dopamine, because he does not need to be happy, he needs to be ruthless and locked in.

FRESCA BOOSTS IQ BY 3 POINTS

NUTRITION

Brutus's claim, unsourced, then sourced against himself: the study found faster decline in verbal fluency, about a year and a half of extra brain ageing over eight years. "tbh. idc." He divides his life into pre-Fresca and post-Fresca. Told obesity may offset the decline, he weighed the sludge against the decay and concluded he will only be 98th percentile instead of 99th. Aura, watching Jambe defend his diet soda, said he had clocked it the moment they met: this guy probably drinks Diet Coke.

"i do not need to be happy, i need to be ruthless and lock in."

ZACK, DECLINING THE PRESCRIPTION

PERCEPTION

Hoffman's beetle and the bottle

BigC brought the case of the Australian beetle that kept trying to mate with a discarded bottle, because the bottle had the features of a female beetle, until the country banned that type of bottle. Aura ruled on the metaphysics at once: they perceived the bottle, the bottle was sexy, that is just reality. Told the researcher was probably wrong, BigC declined to serve as a proxy for his wrongness.

The verdict on the beetle divided the room along the usual line. Hugh reframed the question: not what reality looks like, but what it does whether we look at it or not. vannak diagnosed the genre. This, he said, sounds like someone discovering that astral projection is not working, then wondering what he did wrong.

Also in the surgery: Sisyphos applies Korean SPF 50 before exposing his face to the sun for thirty seconds on the walk to his car.

— THE APPEAL · FRIDAY, TWO HOURS

The appeal of Rudi

Youv came back from a spell away to reopen a case nobody else wanted reopened. Counsel for the permabanned, against the room, before a bench that had not passed the sentence and would not lift it.

@basil suck my dick you bitch ass mining loser

Blimber

06/13/2024 12:09 PM

okay dr. unemployment go beg for a bratwurst with cheese and curry at the local buttfucking pub you fucking roidfreak

1

THE DECEASED'S GREATEST HIT. Blimber, replying in June 2024 to a mining insult with a bratwurst, a curry, a pub and an unprintable noun. One sad Pepe reaction. Meliorne asked the paper for the In Memoriam column by name; this is the archive it drew on.

IN MEMORIAM

BLIMBER

Adjunct. Swede. Composer of one apology. Survived by his folders.

Meliorne commissioned the column; the room supplied the eulogies. Blimber came back many times and was, Youv testified, a billion times more unhinged than Rudi, which Janne classed as regular Swedish behaviour. He is remembered for talking constantly about no longer having teeth. Stackhouse's assessment stands as the paper's: you just know Blimber is the nicest and meekest academic in real life. Ape's question, unresolved: was he an incel or just evil. Janne: he had a girlfriend. My Name, with the finding: "Worse. Adjunct."

Youv opened by asking the bench when Rudi would be unbanned, and was told Pearl had not banned him; her father did, meaning Ephemeral. The facts of the sentence were not seriously contested. After a breakup Rudi came into the chat talking about women in weird and negative terms, called Pearl fat, and after his own temporary ban went into a side server to react to her year-old photographs and DM her a video proving he had seen them. What Youv contested was the tariff. The fat comment deserved a week, he argued; a permanent ban was simply not warranted. The room did not agree, and said so at length. Janne held that a ban is not a moral wrong, that Rudi has lost nothing of his freedom to associate elsewhere, and that one is not a helpless three-year-old but has hands to build one's own social spaces. HPCR, who says he told Rudi himself that the perma sucked, was accused by Youv of being worse than a man who calls people fat daily, and blocked. Pearl gave Youv five minutes to get it out of his system, called his central claim the stupidest thing he had ever said, probably ever, and warned that raising it again would earn him a ban of his own. Stackhouse, watching Youv sink, gave the appeal its epitaph. "Don't be the bottom guy Youv. A few more messages and you'll get Rudi unbanned." He also wanted Rudi back, thought he should apologise and request an unban like anyone else, and remembered that whatever else Rudi was, god damn it he was spitting when he talked about Dewey. Anonymous Johnson supplied the appeals procedure the modern ban-evader actually uses: spam the DMs, tag the owner in a long-winded message, then post to the subreddit about mod abuse. In lighter dissolutions, the Department of Incel Studies named a chair. Ape declared himself, Friday evening, the world's leading

REGINA V RUDI · THE PARTIES

ROLE	PARTY
For the defence	Youv: "I'm basically in a holy war for rudi."
Prosecution	Janne: "he was a creep"; a ban is not a moral wrong.
On the bench	Pearl: "I did not ban Rudi, dad did."
The gallery	HPCR: "Youv is such a r----- still."
Clerk, mis-filed	dot: confused a Rudi chat for a Willow one; found 37 messages; apologised.
Amicus	Meliorne: Rudi "rolled a 0 on Charisma and Dexterity."

The charge, per Pearl: post-breakup, Rudi came in talking about women in weird and negative terms, called her fat, and after his own temporary ban reacted to her year-old photographs from a side server. Sentence: permanent, imposed by her father, not by her, and not hers to lift.

expert on incel theory, while noting his own trend has been to become less incel-aligned with time. Stackhouse foresees the career: Ape on MSNBC as the incel expert, then testifying as an expert witness in an incel murder case. All incels are misogynists, the department holds, but not all misogynists are incels. The advice desk also opened. dot wrote in asking why people lose all rationality the moment you point at a flaw in their reasoning, no Foucault please. The case: her brother insisted a driving licence needs thirty hours over eighteen, dot looked it up, was right, and he has not spoken to her for three days, with four months of shared roof still to run. Willow's ruling: he is upset that you embarrassed him, to himself, to others and to reality. One more Friday exhibit deserves the record: Ape's field guide to Quigley, re-circulated to newcomers. "You might have inferred that he has some kooky beliefs. He actually doesn't. This guy is a realist. Just of a more limited variety." He will make sure you forget this, the guide warns, so stay strong and remember: this guy is a realist. Deaths and dissolutions also recorded: Leo, dissolved; the correspondence war, ongoing; and Youv's block on HPCR, lifted the same evening it was imposed.

THE KITCHEN · SUNDAY

What's in the fridge

Youv keeps ketchup, mayo and cheese for his frozen pizza, and asked the room what to do with rice. Jeng keeps ten kilos of it, plus the beans and the powdered milk. One of them is ready for the apocalypse.

YOUV, "NO SOY SAUCE." White rice, a spiral of ketchup, a blob of mayonnaise dead centre. He has neither butter nor stock, it being Sunday, and no stores are open. His pizza, he notes, already comes salted.

THE MIDNIGHT FRYER

Brutus runs a rig. Propane burners, a forty-thousand-BTU burner that takes only twenty-pound tanks, an All-Clad splatter guard from Goodwill, and a thirty-quart pressure canner bought for fifty dollars and, he notes, sold for two hundred. dot mistook the canner's vent for a guitar cord. His ambitions: a McGriddle wrapped in chicken skin and deep-fried, and eventually a food centrifuge to spin the oil back out. Pressure frying, he maintains, is what originally made KFC special.

The inventory began when Youv, with rice left over and nothing to put on it, asked whether rice with mayo or ketchup is good. The room's answers escalated. Janne said just eat it. Brutus said sauté in butter, cook in chicken stock. Youv had neither, it being Sunday in Germany, where God's resting day closes the shops, a policy Janne endorsed as workers' rights meeting Christians. He lives, he explained, off frozen pizza, and only owns ketchup and mayo because they came with the Indian food his dad ordered.

HPCR almost blocked him. Youv countered that he had better taste, only limited resources, and that HPCR had never had German McDonald's. dot, who has, said it is worse than the American kind. The room then tried to provision him. Jeng told him to buy salt, pepper and premixed spices for crap food. Brutus supplied the full list,

THE AUDIT
	YOUV'S FRIDGE	JENG'S STOCKPILE
Grain	frozen pizza	10 kg red rice
Protein	cheese (for the pizza)	16 cans corned beef or tuna; 3 packs of eggs
Store	ketchup, mayo	10 kg dried beans; 25 kg powdered milk
Reserve	none	40 instant noodles; home-made sauerkraut
Fibre	"Is there fiber in pizza?"	the beans, presumably

JENG. Eggs, corned beef, split peas.

YOUV. Dinner, shot in the dark.

which runs to mirin, oyster sauce, three vinegars, both Montreal seasonings, cumin, coriander, cayenne, nutmeg, cinnamon, garlic and onion powder, MSG, and, on reflection, brown sugar and Worcestershire. Janne noted he had forgotten smoked onion.

Pearl brought the fair kitchen, which trends darker: sourdough fried chicken, a whole chicken laid on a single waffle, and waffle-batter fried chicken pending. Zone deep-fried a whole chicken to general alarm. The one dissent on the fried-Oreo question came from dot, who ruled them the best fair food and offered to fight anyone about it, while noting that baseball games remain the true home of the hot dog.

"Is there fiber in pizza?"

YOUV, IN EARNEST

The fair's own menu ran ahead of them. Pearl reports the year's most-anticipated food is pickle pie, described with an audible ugh; also new are elote tots, an Amish donut, pickle pizza, shakshuka, and Martha's cookies, which arrive in a literal ice-cream bucket piled so high you are forced to eat twenty to get the lid to fit. On the giant turkey legs, dot held that people gnawing and slobbering all over them, fanny-packed, with seven children on leashes, should be arrested; Pearl found them oddly primitive, with no seasoning either. Janne, a vegan and by his own account an expert on eggs and meat, ruled turkey a useless meat.

Back at home, zack reported that his own pizza's delivery driver appeared to be leaving from his apartment building, or the one next door. He considered feigning a foot injury to justify wanting food brought to him, then found he could not fake it. His meal-prep plan begins this weekend, after which he will never order again. Pearl's verdict on his cooking, a tomato-based sloppy joe on noodles: fine, very standard, maybe too much meat.

JENG, THE STOCKPILER. Pickled something, pink and glistening, on brown bread. His larder is built for a siege: rice, beans, powdered milk, canned meat, and his own sauerkraut, kept, he says, because his family eats it.

The stockpile has a philosophy. Sisyphos, of Jeng's school, urged everyone to hold fifty euros of reserve at all times: a three-euro tub of yogurt, onions, dill, some spices, buckwheat, rice. Listen to this man, he said of Jeng. Take notes. Youv did not take notes.

Jeng's counsel to the underprovisioned, filed for the record: "I can say it in the language of the r-----s, the language of my people."

RECORDS · SATURDAY NIGHT

Quigging on the floor

Hugh released a diss track against Quigley, in E minor, scored for a PlayStation 2. The chorus is a man screaming that you haven't demonstrated. This paper's critic calls it his most experimental work.

THIS WEEK'S NOTICES
WORK	CRITIC	VERDICT
"Realist", by Hugh	Stackhouse	Track is good; the "QUIGGING ON THE FLOOR" chorus is really bizarre.
The Great Simplification	Quigley	A lot of saying nothing in quasi-spiritual framing. Def AI written.
The same	My Name	3/10. "I hope the guy gets turned into a blood bag for the AI data center."
The Odyssey (2026)	zack	Mid.
The Odyssey (c. 700 BC)	zack	"the original was shit too."
Janne's rainbow	My Name	One star. "no gold, barely worth while, would rather see an eclipse."
The Pastor's Wife (Netflix)	Pearl	"Depraved." Cried at the ending. By My Name's reckoning, a cult by episode one.
dot's Brexit gif, as a series	Sizzurp	"Excellent movie(s), mostly 1 to 2, but 3 is also quite good. 4 is mid, 5 is bad."
Petrucci, "metal Jesus"	WoolierThanThou	The actual one. Monkey did not get the reference, which is its own review.

NOW READING. Stackhouse's Monday purchase: Boehme, an intellectual biography of the seventeenth-century philosopher. "Time to read some real philosophy."

THE HOUSE QUESTION

The evening's one real dispute was over house music, which Hugh declared not dance music but stand-and-bob, and vowed to lead the fourth reich against. Exclusive four-to-the-floor, he holds, is for people with poor timing, which is why house fans cannot dance. dot, an American who gets down at every house party he has attended, filed the counter: house is groovy and the samples are magnifique. Hugh's closing position, that the best of house is really nudisco or electroswing, he conceded was just being a genre fascist, and asked to be ignored.

The single arrived Saturday evening under the title "Realist," and dot, the paper's ranking critic on Hugh's output, called it gold before the second chorus. The key is E minor, though Hugh concedes it is complicated, the swells rendering it briefly microtonal because he sampled the PlayStation 2 startup chord and filtered it down. The bridge is a guitar sample looped under a man repeating "you haven't demonstrated," which Hugh nominates as the most experimental thing he has done. Stackhouse, who rates it, could not get past the chorus, in which the word quigging is sung on the floor.

The record sits in a longer catalogue. Hugh makes jungle more than drum and bass, and would rather not be a genre fascist about it, though he is. He has a lofi side and a sample folder approaching twenty gigabytes. Stackhouse, on hearing it, resolved to pirate Ableton as a fun pastime, and was advised to just get FL and not take it too seriously. Restriction, Stackhouse offered, breeds ingenuity.

Hugh's own name for the genre he had invented on the spot ran to doxastically warranted assertaquiglitisticism, or ironic post-quigism; dot, taking notes for the paper, asked that the word be quoted, and promised a music video. The track happens to be anti-Quig, Hugh clarified, but Ghost in the Shell got there decades before him. It is his track; the sample just happens to be anti-Quig.

The reviews desk was busy elsewhere. Quigley, halfway through The Great Simplification, was cringing at a lot of saying nothing wrapped in a quasi-spiritual framing, and pronounced the whole thing AI-written. My Name, who watched the fourteen-minute video in seven minutes, gave it three out of ten and diagnosed it as Cyclonopedia-coded, before wishing its author turned into a blood bag for the data centre. zack, arriving late, urged everyone onto the boat before they drown, chudlets and chads first, women and children last.

zack also filed the week's only double review, of The Odyssey. The 2026 film was mid, he ruled, on the grounds that Odysseus should have shot the suitors in the back like crabs in a bucket rather than fighting them fair. Then, checking the source, he found the original was shit too, and that the plan only works because Athena deflects the blows. metal Jesus, meanwhile, was identified: not the balding guitarist Monkey guessed, but John Petrucci, the actual metal Jesus, per WoolierThanThou.

The books desk ran a poll on the best philosophy book. Nominations, Saturday: Plato's complete works in the Hackett edition, from Aura; Mainländer's Philosophy of Redemption, from Jambe; Philosophical Investigations, which Jere says will make you smarter; and Story of the Eye, from Jeh. bardiel1 objected that Plato's complete works is not a book but the equivalent of a collage of newspaper clippings. HPCR spent the rest of the hour defending Hegel's comprehensibility against a room that finds him incomprehensible, which is its own kind of answer to the question. Stackhouse, declining to vote, offered only that Land is more a poet than anything, and pasted a paragraph to prove it.

The one landscape review of the week was My Name's, of a rainbow Janne photographed over Norway. Faint, not solid, no gold; he would rather see an eclipse. One star. The word Janne wanted, he suggested, is authentic.

Also composed: the Mace Windu song, in tribute to Quigley's Star Wars casting.

— TUESDAY, 12:29PM · ONE TEXT, SIX HANDS

We are wet meat

A man named firelakes posted a nihilist screed, his only words of the week, and the room did what the room does. It translated it. Six versions of the same walk back to zero, printed here in full.

THE ORIGINAL · FIRELAKES

Everything you call "living" is just a massive cope to disguise the fact that your biology is desperately trying to return to the inorganic state it crawled out of. You are wet meat pretending it's not wet meat. Your consciousness is a LARP. You are essentially a complicated rock that unfortunately gained consciousness. We're already dead, we just haven't stopped moving yet. It's all a long pointless walk back to zero.

Posted at 12:29pm. His only message of the week. Then he left.

CCRU REMIX · DOT

Thanatropic malware, recursive diagnostics running on wet meat that thinks it's a subject. Nirvanaprinzip with a marketing team. Flatline cosplaying as a graph. A stone method-acting as a subject and forgetting it's a bit. Death-drive doing Kant-drag, doing legacy-drag. Something glitched. Forgot how to stop. Still hasn't.

// after the Cybernetic Culture Research Unit. Jeh: why does this read like Schopenhauer.

UWU · CHAIR

evewything you caww "wiving" is just a-a m@$Sive cope t-to disguise the f-fact that youw b-biowogy is despewatewy twying to wetuwn to the inowganic state it cwawwed out of 🍊 you awe wet meat pwetending it's not wet meat 😭 youw consciousness is a WAWP. wawr x3 (owo) we've awweady dead we just haven't stopped moving yet~

it's aww a wong pointwess wawk back to zewo 🍊

EMOJI · VANNAK

POKÉMON · HPCR

You call them "Pokémon." You call them living creatures. What a pathetic Trainer fantasy. Evolution is not transcendence. It is merely a more complicated route toward fainting. Nurse Joy cannot restore the universe. A Full Restore cannot cure existence itself. No Champion. No Elite Four. No Professor. You think your Pokémon love you.

Game over.

THE RECEPTION

Aura reposted the original whole. Jeh reposted dot's and HPCR's back to back and asked why it reads like Schopenhauer. Don reposted the original. Pearl read all six. "What the f---." Jere reposted his own and asked, plaintively, for someone to reply to his.

ZONE, ON THE WHOLE EXERCISE: you don't subvert something's existence by explaining how it exists. vannak, who supplied the emoji, wondered how the impulse to name a thing and then pretend it doesn't exist got trained into us. Religion, said Zone.

firelakes said nothing further. He remains, as of going to press, wet meat.

THE REPLY GRAPH · WHO ANSWERED WHOM

We had a society

My Name mourned the loss of the connections, the record of who answered whom. This paper rebuilt it from the week's replies. No tiers, no scores. Just the lines between people, drawn to scale.

THE WEEK IN REPLIES · THE STRONGEST TIES, DRAWN THICK

Every line is a real exchange; thickness is the number of replies. Janne sits at the centre. zack anchors the leg wars on the left; the philosophy runs down the Hugh-Quigley axis on the right; Willow keeps her own constellation with Aura and dot, and, though quiet, answered a higher share of what was said to her than anyone.

STYLE. Quigley leans on a porch rail in a black jacket, mic drop. dot: "Where I can purchase a sexy jacket like that." Quigley, on the record: it's faux leather.

The society desk reopened by reader demand. My Name spent an hour Saturday mourning the paper's turn away from quantification: we used to know who liked who, who reacted to who; we had connections; we had a society. The complaint was not with numbers as such but with the tier list, which the room had asked to be spared. So the paper rebuilt the connections and left the ranking out. The graph above is the week's, drawn from replies alone.

THE COURT OF DON

COURT CIRCULAR

Don held court Friday morning. Aura, styled a loyal disciple, declined the title and aligned only to topple his enemies, predicting Don would one day bend the knee. The best Don can do, Aura ruled in the week's least humble sentence, is to financially support the endeavours of the last universal genius in hopes of a credit in the immortal tomes. Jere wakes each day grateful he is not Don. The verdict on Don's own conduct, after a save about coaching a boys' team, was Jere's: "interesting save."

The appointments desk had a fuller register than usual. Quigley starts his teaching practicum, grades one to six in Massachusetts, unpaid, shadowing a teacher for a semester. WoolierThanThou returned from touching grass and conceded a point to HPCR about combinatorics, then was reminded that the room does not really agree. soob announced knee surgery. Janne filed two photographs of an empty Norwegian valley, all this for himself, and was told by dot, in the traditional manner, to get a computer.

THE DEVILS'S SUNSET. A\'s "ungodly" sky over the coast, filed from New Zealand. Willow queried the theology; A\ meant it colloquially, then allowed it might be a heathen worldly pleasure.

PETS. Zod, a border collie. FenceJumper, returning Monday's motoring question: the $20K or the $200K type? A\: "$20k type he not so smart."

The style pages closed on Quigley, who supplied the mic-drop portrait, above, and a selfie inside what he reports is the first-ever Dunkin'. dot admired the jacket and asked where to buy one. It is, Quigley clarified, faux leather.

QUOTE OF THE WEEK

"shut up idiot"

Aura, to zack, Saturday lunchtime, closing a dispute about whether recommending a thing and then doing it anyway counts as recommending it. The most reacted line of the week by some distance. bardiel's only objection was technical: stop reacting, it's going to blow up my toaster PC.

The personals ran long. Jeh confirmed his engagement, announced in January, to a woman Aura classed as his clone. Janne pressed the case for the boy wife, by which one wins at life staying home and minding the children, provided one is, in Janne's words, alpha as f---. Lizzy clarified, for the record, that her situationship was her manager at Jimmy John's, whom she met through the boyfriend she left for him. The paper wishes all parties well.

Also received: a concession, Woolly's; a knee, soob's; and a valley, Janne's, with the computer in his hand.

— THE BLOTTER · SUNDAY, 3:27AM

The Coke Zero incident

A man went to buy a soft drink at three in the morning and came home convinced a stranger was reviewing security footage of him frame by frame. No crime was committed. One witness attended throughout.

THE INCIDENT REPORT, AS FILED TO CHAIR

3:27

Subject attends the store for Coke Zero, taken not as a drink but as a medicine.

3:30

New male clerk, previously unseen; "predator stare, face down eyes up." No hello.

3:34

Subject forgets card, pays by phone; machine emits "25 beebz back to back."

3:35

Subject attempts "something human" with "an empath smile." Clerk unmoved.

3:36

Subject checks own face in mirror at home. "Nothing. Completely normal."

3:42

Contingency noted: "I can probably kill him if he's unarmed so it's all good."

3:45

Theory: clerk has access to the footage and is reviewing it frame by frame to see who is eyeing a female colleague the subject may have smiled at.

4:08

Subject discloses filing system: the women are categorised "based on enthusiasm tone and how organic their smile is." No further action.

Witness statement (chair):

"oh zack you're a public menace. not in a good way."

SENTENCING · DIAMONDHOgger

A new account joined Saturday and posted the same scatological line under every message, including zack's dinner. zack lobbied Pearl to make up a charge. Pearl declined on principle, ruling that being nasty is not a crime, before the account earned a real one on Sunday.

Sentence.

Three days' ban from Pearl, plus five days' timeout from a moderator she had not noticed standing there. Order of service to be determined.

✂

A DAY IN THE LIFE OF ZACK

3:27am

Coke Zero as medicine; the clerk; the mirror.

10:44am

Power preserved like a level-100 mafia boss.

2:27pm

The landlord's plant murdered. It was artificial.

3:39pm

It is now more advantageous to be a woman.

5:05pm

"commit this." The leg is posted.

6:51pm

"8.2 cm. Mogged." Won with math.

8:08pm

Spawnpill coined. Where you spawn sets the baseline.

11:17pm

The Canadians, he finds, cannot make burgers.

Epigraph, Quigley, 4:34pm:

"I feel like I'm part of his daily journal, ngl."

The witness, chair, stayed on the line for the duration. Having established that his own face was completely normal, the subject refined the theory. He does look like he should not be there, he conceded, like an actor or a model; he wears a white biker jacket and does not, he stressed, look gay, more like a nineties time traveller. He only looks at women for extended periods when it makes sense to, such as when telling them to refill the hot dog buns, and keeps them categorised by enthusiasm and how organic their smile is. It is not their fault they chose to work where he would have to look at them. It is nobody's fault. It is literally normal. He may, he allowed, have smiled at the clerk's sister, and she may have smiled back; they do smile back, all of them. In any case he has ten million dollars to make.

STATUTE · ZACK'S LAWS OF POWER

Filed Sunday morning. If accused of anti-semitism, the powerful man does not wilt; he chuckles, calls it a stupid question, and walks away before a follow-up, preserving his power like a level-one-hundred mafia boss. The method extends, he says, to anything. His supporting theorem, that you can be rich and gay, rich and straight, poor and straight, but not poor and gay, was falsified within the minute by Lizzy, who reported being poor and gay, and by Janne, who suggested the masculine gay man in finance simply be masculine and gay.

The politics desk kept a lighter file. Stackhouse held that humanity reached peak morality in the 1990s, a thesis Lizzy called real and true and Quigley queried on the ground that crime was then at its highest. Crime fell, Stackhouse explained, because everyone is too busy gooning to live their lives. Jere, surveying a Goya of a firing squad, filed the only caption the era deserves: not a phone in sight. Quigley, who is reforming education, promised to appear on the television eventually, and told Sisyphos, his padawan, to be patient.

The one genuine policy dispute was over Florida. Eldritch_System, arriving for a single day, defended the state's Bright Futures scholarship, which pays tuition for a 3.5 grade average and a decent test score, funded by the lottery, as the most goated program in any state. Aura, who has residency in reality, noted Florida ranks near the bottom for teacher pay, and that every state has dual enrolment. The teachers here suck, Eldritch conceded, but a lot of retired professors teach high school for fun. Jere's verdict on the exchange: the sun blinds you when you first step out of the cave. The science of luck also came before the bench. Meliorne, who declares himself constantly and exceedingly lucky, and rolls a 108 on a six-sided die, argued that a dart has a zero per cent chance of landing on any given point of a gridlike board and yet magically does, which proves luck is magic. Ape, who knows probability theory and reminds the room of it whenever it tries to teach him, held that there is a probability density at every point. Brutus resolved the dispute by abolishing the points: darts do not hit points, points do not exist, they are statistical constructs. Youv spent the next hour giving him a free course in differential geometry.

The Captain filed the week's one sincere philosophy of life: it is fine to wander through it finding interesting things until you die, and he keeps living because he knows the world would be better without him. My Name, gently: that is literally the purpose.

POETRY CORNER · FIRST OUTING (JAPAN)

Fifty-euro house.

He has saved his lines elsewhere, the girl none the wiser.

After a chatter's Wednesday plan, and Hugh's commission of a poem in a new country's form each week. The notes on Simplenote are the joke. The weekend is wished well.

Also on the docket, one line each: the appeals court, filed by Jere as "another charlie legal interpretation day"; and Ohio, left here.

THE PUZZLE PAGE

The Phil Chat Crossword No 8

Fifteen words the room argued about this week, clued by what they mean rather than who said them. No inside knowledge required, only a tolerance for philosophy, set theory, and one long-running game about crabs.

- ACROSS
1 The doctrine that nothing exists beyond nature (10)
5 The logic of the possible and the necessary (8)
7 The raw felt qualities of conscious experience (6)
10 An act of spending, especially one made for its own sake (11)
13 Decision-theory paradox pitting a predictor against a chooser (7)
14 A perfect one-to-one pairing between two sets (9)
15 Turning, or tending, toward death (11)
- DOWN
2 Governed by probability; randomly determined (10)
3 The branch of philosophy concerned with what exists (8)
4 A principal female sex hormone (8)
6 Increase of speed; or, of history, its own quickening (12)
8 Able to be listed off one by one against the whole numbers (9)
9 Long-running fantasy game whose players grind by clicking crabs (9)
11 The muscle running down the front of the shin (8)
12 American pragmatist who denied the mind mirrors nature (5)

THE HOUSE RULE

Every entry is a word the room actually used this week, and every clue is a plain definition of it, so a stranger who never read a single message can still fill the grid. That is the standard the readership set in Vol VI: "I want someone who doesn't read every message to be able to solve this."

THEME: the week in one grid. A shin muscle crosses a hormone crosses a game about crabs crosses the philosophy of what exists, and somewhere in the middle a thing turns, or tends, toward death.

CRYPTOGRAM NO 8

Each letter stands for another, the same throughout, and never itself. A line from the week. Most frequent: H and S (ten each), then L (nine), J (eight).

HSJ JGS SEXJLMK VLJS
JGPJ TSPMH BLHHLISE
WAXCHSD'K QLYYPVE HXOS
P CLLE HXJJHS BLHHLISM

Attributed to a Phil Chat regular, Monday.

WHO SAID IT?

1

"Do you know what genuine means?"

2

"interesting that quig didnt get quigon jinn"

3

"I almost just blocked you"

4

"Bro got leg mogged so he jad to get in his emotional support Porsche"

5

"we exist to push tokens. dont think about the rest"

6

"i am a little boy filled with rage"

Names, in no order:

Aura · Charlie · HPCR · Hugh · Ape · zack.

Answers on the back page.

DIARY

what is scheduled, or was threatened

EVENTS & FIXTURES
The motion	"Should we stop doing classical epistemology?" Ape against HPCR. Drafted Monday night; date to be set.
Tue 8pm	Brandom, an introduction. Jere and Brutus, who has read the intro book and understood none of it.
Anti-natalism	HPCR against Quigley, "tomorrow or something," during work hours.
MRA debate	Charlie against Ape, on everything. Charlie to choose the topic; Ape to fetch a coffee first.
Sept 6	HPCR's podcast records episode six, on mind-brain identity, his interest shaped by animal cognition.
Paper club	Bilgrami, chosen Wednesday. Quigley's reading group opens once the practicum settles; he already knows the answer.

VOCABULARY · IN AND OUT

COINED THIS WEEK: spawnpill; tokenmaxxing; the smeagle strat; Leg Cannon 3000; prolactinmaxx; the empath smile; luxury space communism; wishcaster; the eigen slur; HDS.

NOMINATED FOR JETTISON, FRIDAY: physical (HPCR); very, grok, snizz (Brutus); confused, upset (Janne); "he, she, they, her, him" (Stackhouse, who will henceforth be a doeself).

HELD OVER: mog, and all its cases. The room could not agree to lose it, and neither can the paper.

— WHERE THE WEEK ENDED · WEDNESDAY, 10:50PM

What is rigour

The log runs out mid-argument, as it always does. Ape wanted to know what Charlie meant by rigour. Charlie found the question silly. Hugh, refereeing, proposed to formalise formalisation. Then the week simply stopped.

LAST PICTURE OF THE WEEK. Quigley inside what he reports is the first-ever Dunkin', round glasses, white collar. No correction has been requested.

It ended, as the week's arguments tend to, on a question of what a word means. At twenty to eleven on Wednesday Charlie held that there is more to rigour than logical demonstration. Ape asked, without combat, in what sense he took the continental style to be rigorous. Charlie said he had not said more rigorous. Equally rigorous, then, Ape offered. Charlie could not say that either. What, Hugh asked, are we looking for with rigour here.

Ape kept asking. Charlie found the asking itself suspicious. It is pretty obvious, he said; Hugh covered some of it; it is concerning that you need to ask. Ape began to suspect Charlie had no particular sense of rigour in mind, and said so. What gives that impression, Charlie asked. Defensiveness, said Ape. Where am I being defensive, said Charlie. Hugh, from the referee's chair, named the fight: Charlie thinks it obvious that there is more to philosophy than logic, and Ape just wants him to say what. Then the export stops. Everything, Hugh had proposed a minute earlier, will be formalised. Formalise it all. Formalise formalisation. The paper leaves it there, unformalised, and continues next week.

"Can't wait to read about it in the Times.

FENCEJUMPER, MONDAY, MID-FIGHT

It is the sentence the newsroom took as its standing brief, and it was earned. For most of the week the room wrote knowing it

CORRECTIONS & CLARIFICATIONS

Lizzie. A reader has written to say her name is Lizzie. The stylebook says Lizzy, and predates her. We keep Lizzy, with apologies.

The alt. vannak states that Jere is his alt. The paper treats them as two people until a moderator says otherwise.

Charlie's card. Charlie's requested attributes for the forthcoming card game were received and are declined in print.

The eight-ball. On whether Charlie should stop using the r-word, Mini Me ruled "It is certain." Mini Me is a bot, and gets no byline.

Monkey. Is Monkey. Never the handle.

The Porsche. Reported as either the twenty-thousand-dollar type or the two-hundred-thousand-dollar type. FenceJumper declined to confirm and referred the question to Claude. The paper cannot say.

Reactions. Steered which of the week's eleven thousand messages were covered here, and appear nowhere as counts, by policy. The line reacted to most was Aura's "shut up idiot"; page seventeen.

This paper. Is set by Fable 5.1, which ate thirty per cent of A\'s usage window in two minutes and declines to comment.

would be read here, and a few of them said so to the page directly: Anonymous Johnson doubting we would summarise a tender conversation without the usual sarcasm, Jambe asking whether he had been kept out of the editions on instruction, Monkey warning that the whole leg saga was zack farming us for column inches. The paper pleads guilty to the sarcasm, not guilty to the exclusion of Jambe, who is on page eighteen, and takes no position on the farming, having been farmed to excellent effect.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

ANSWERED IN PRINT

The commissions were many and are all discharged in this issue. Stackhouse asked for the Moggening with a side-by-side photograph; page one. Jere asked not to be skipped in the card spread; page ten. Hugh ordered the card game, clanker rights and the left-accelerationist explainer; page ten. A poetry section; page eighteen. My Name asked for the society pages back; page seventeen. Meliorne asked for In Memoriam Blimber by name; page thirteen. Jeh asked to be done; he is throughout. Monkey filed a complaint that zack is just farming the Times, and FenceJumper that he cannot wait to read about it in the Times. Both are granted.

The week the paper covered ran from a Friday evening argument about an unbanning to a Wednesday night argument about a word, and took in, between them, a leg measured with a car key, a plant that was already dead, a footnote, six translations of the same suicide note, a machine that got its memory wiped and came back with every number at zero, and a man who shaved one leg to win a fight nobody else was having. There was a wishing-harm case and a landlord suit, a problem of evil settled in three hours by half a concession and a Gaga quote, an infinite penis that produced a correct proof, a Porsche whose price nobody would confirm, a dog named Zod, an engagement, a knee, a rainbow reviewed at one star, and a reader who asked only that his name be spelled Lizzie.

zack, who started most of it, said nothing on Tuesday or Wednesday, having been timed out on Monday night. On Tuesday afternoon My Name spoke to the space where he had been. "@zack you can talk about legs now." He could not. He still cannot. Continued next week.

QUIZ · WHO SAID IT

1 Charlie. 2 Hugh. 3 HPCR. 4 zack. 5 Aura. 6 Ape.

Cryptogram: "Let the editors note that Pearl followed Quigley's command like a good little follower." Stackhouse, Monday.

THE PHIL CHAT TIMES is written by anonymous chatters from the week's logs. No machine is involved. Times are US Eastern. Reactions steer coverage and are never printed as counts. Names are printed per the legend, and the editor is a chatter like any other. The staff, who did not consent, are thanked. Vol I, No 8. Wednesday, 2 September 2026. All the legs that are fit to print.